What must change for Europe

Cultural Insight

American parents buy
Disney on instinct.

European parents buy
it on evidence.

Disney opens the door. Proof closes the sale.

European parents take longer, scrutinise the premium harder and need to believe the doll will genuinely earn its place in real family life.

Not just as “a cute Disney thing” but as something emotionally useful that sparks joy, comfort and connection through nurturing play.

So the launch can't rely on polished product claims alone.

The proof has to be visible where decisions actually happen: in the content itself, at shelf and on product pages.

So what does this mean for our campaign?

We make the campaign itself the proof.

Not through classic toy-ad gloss.

But by showing real family life. Real reactions. Premium realism.
Where the doll proves it belongs in everyday family life.

Make the quality obvious.

Make the features unmistakable.

Make the magic feel real and recognisable.

Campaign engine

Real = our proof strategy

REAL MOMENTS

Unforced family moments and reactions that show how the doll earns its place in the home.

REAL DEMONSTRATION

Clear "see it to believe it" moments that show what the doll actually does and why it's different.

REAL VOICES

Parents, gift givers and creators saying what they actually think (reviews, quotes, reactions).

REAL WORLD CUES

Proof placed where decisions happen: retail, social comments, shelf cues, search and PR.

Creative Platform

Little People. Big Feelings. Real Reactions.

Disney Darlings is happiness you can hold.

A campaign built around the best bit of the product:
what happens after the doll is in a child's arms.

A celebration of nurturing play in the real world.
Little moments, big feelings and reactions you can't fake.

How we bring it to life

Real Kids.
Real Parents.
Real Reactions.

We capture unforced moments that feel emotionally true and instantly recognisable, especially joy and happiness.

How we bring it to life

Features that ✨ sell themselves. ✨

The doll isn't explained. It's experienced.

Wake, feed, play, sleep, shown through real reactions that do the selling for us.

We make the doll's interactivity unmistakable, because seeing it is what unlocks desire.

How we bring it to life

Look and feel: Real is the new premium

Premium realism is our aesthetic approach:
beautifully shot, tastefully styled yet emotionally true.

Modern and aspirational, without looking over-produced or cheesy.

Our Disney Darlings won't live in a clinically perfect, ad-world set. They'll live in real family life captured with warmth and charm.

Disney warmth, real-world credibility.

Production plan

The “Real Reactions” shoot day

One day. One location.

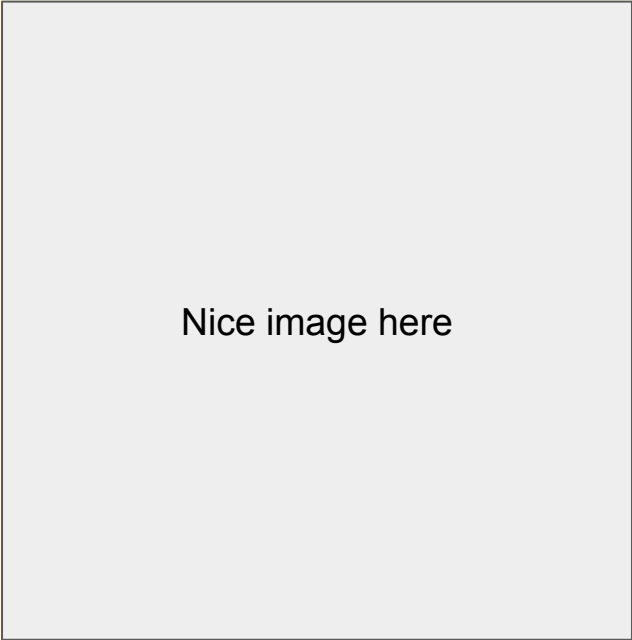

Multiple families.

Loads of premium content.

We build a warm playroom in a London house location and invite a mix of real families with young kids (incl. French and German speakers), plus a small number of influencer families.

As they explore the dolls (lightly guided), we capture genuine reactions from kids and adults (parents, siblings, grandparents).

Output: Hero TVC, OOH stills and social content.

“Real Reactions” 30s TVC – Concept

MEDIA: TV / CTV (D+, NFX, YOUTUBE)

A fast-cut, beautifully shot montage of real kids and families discovering Disney Darlings in the moment.

We open on a gifting moment, then race through the key features.

No scripts. No child actors. Just real joy and reactions that make the Disney magic impossible to miss.

“Real Reactions” 30s TVC – Storyboard

Storyboards are at the end of the deck as I play with them so they don't clutter the main slides. For the presentation, we'll show one frame per slide for easier viewing. For sharing afterwards, we'll need to reformat into multi-frame pages.

“Real Reactions” social video cutdowns

On social, people scroll past anything that feels like a TV ad.

So instead of simply posting the TVC, we rebuild it into short, thumb-stopping videos that feel genuinely captured in the moment: quick hooks, real reactions and a few “blooper” moments (interruptions, laughter, stumbles, chaos) that instantly signal it’s not scripted but still sells the magic.

We still land the product proof, just faster and looser.

Same idea, same features just packaged in the only way social audiences actually watch.

Organic-first social content

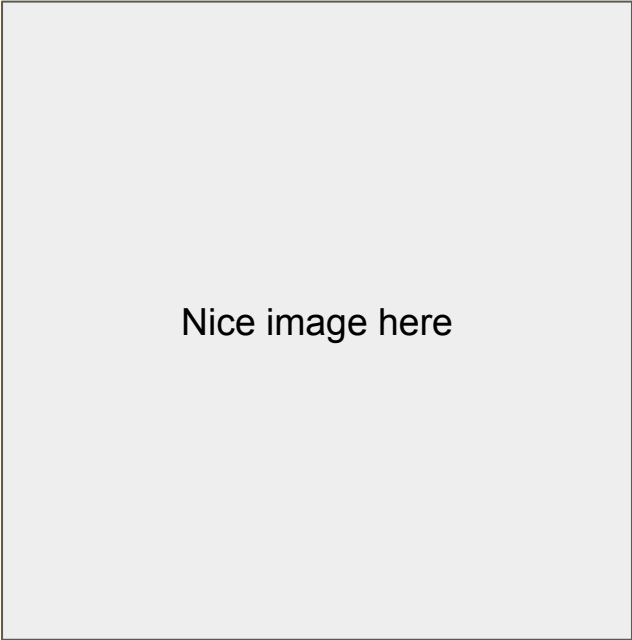

POV: You're the Disney Darling

If “real reactions” is our engine, this is the purest version of it.

We attach a tiny camera to the doll itself so we get kids face-to-face: the unwrapping moment, the first smile, the cuddle, the chaos. It'll instantly look different to normal toy content, which is half the battle on social.

It also makes the features feel effortless. The wand comes into frame, the bottle, the doll giggles and we catch the exact split-second reaction. All spliced with cutaways showing the doll itself.

And because it's real life, it'll have the funny bits too. The doll gets dropped. We hear an “oops.” We get a second of ceiling. All stuff that makes it feel genuine.

Organic-first social content

POV: You're the toddlers

The previous idea, flipped.

We mount tiny 360 cameras on the hats of our two tiny sisters, so we see Disney Darlings from carpet eye level: chaotic, joyful and totally in the moment.

We capture the stuff adults never really get: running in, falling over, racing the doll across the rug, cuddles, giggles, the wand flashing into frame and cheeks glowing right in front of them.

It feels like you're inside their play world, which makes it instantly more watchable and more shareable.

Reaction replays

A simple, repeatable format built around the kids reacting.

We cold open on the reaction (shock, laughter, pure joy), then rewind to reveal what caused it: wand, bottle, tickle or bedtime.

Then we replay the moment like a highlight clip: slow-mo, freeze-frame, zoom, rewind.

Finished with quick on-screen captions or “baby translations” that turn the reaction into the joke.

My first ever doll

A short, documentary-style social clip that makes the purchase the story.

We follow one of our kids on a trip to Smyths to choose her very first doll.

We open on the reaction (instant hug, pure joy), then rewind to the store journey: racing down the aisle, scanning the shelf, picking up a few, putting them back, real indecision. A Smyths colleague helps, but it stays light and un-staged.

Twist: as they leave, the helper surprises her with the “nearly picked” doll too. Double joy, big feelings and a Smyths moment that feels genuinely sweet, not ad-y.

Smyths retail proof concepts

Real Reaction Shelf Talkers

Shelf bubbles with real parent quotes:

“She hugged it and wouldn’t let go” / “10/10 giggles” / “Cheeks lit up instantly”

Styled like handwritten notes with name + city
(eg Maya, Manchester / Nina, Berlin)

QR Code Stickers: See Real Kids React

Shelf QR code stickers linking to our short social “Real Reactions” clips. Organic, unpolished proof (not the TVC).

“First Doll” Badges

Turns the purchase into a milestone using simple shelf flag or on-pack sticker:
“Perfect first doll”

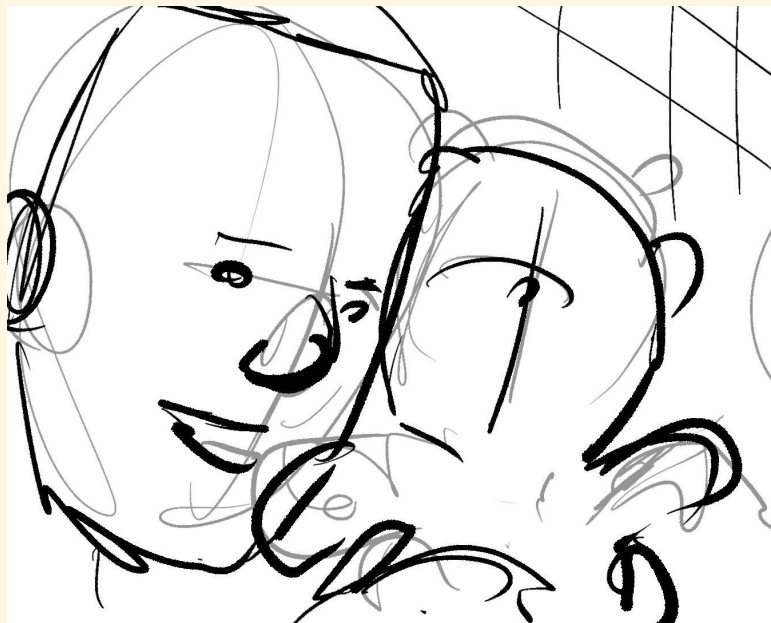

Smyths Staff One-Liner

A single helpful sentence for staff to use in aisle: “If it’s their first doll, this one gets the best reaction because it giggles and lights up.”

Staff Pick Shelf Badges

Small recommendation shelf badge that feels non-brand: “Smyths Staff Pick” / “Kids love the Disney character clothes.”

CREATOR STRATEGY

REAL FAMILIES, REAL MEMORIES

We will collaborate with family creators with young children from the UK, Germany & France on content that authentically captures how Disney Darlings fit into their everyday family lives.

Our ideal content creator is relatable and natural with a focus on candid, unplanned content with their family.

Collaborations can be one off posts or longer partnerships with creators where the Disney Darlings feature organically across multiple videos.

We'll also ask select creators (1 per market) to be part of our content day with their children - further fuelling the creative campaign with real magic.

Image ref

DARLING DIARIES

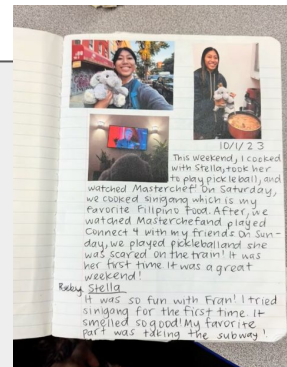

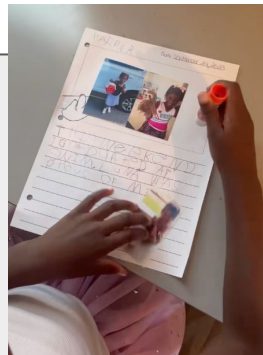

Do you remember getting to take the class teddy home for the weekend at school? Bringing it out on your activities that weekend, taking photos and writing about it in the diary. No two pages were the same because no two children are the same.

We'll ask our content creators to capture moments of their children with Disney Darlings while they're going about their usual family activities, showing how the dolls fit into each child's life, creating real memories with them.

Let's see the world through the child's eyes; showcasing any photos or videos the child has taken with their Disney Darling to create a homemade diary / scrapbook moment. The children will probably be used to their Mums filming or taking photos of them for their content, so they will do the same with their Disney Darlings!

Asset examples:

- A carousel or photo swipe post of candid moments with the doll or
- A classic daily vlog with the doll naturally integrating into quality family time.

MEDIA PARTNERS - THE 7 STARS

7 Stars are the UK's largest independent media agency. They are also very nice people. And good at what they do.

Despite their size, they are focused on collaboration and building strong relationships - working with media owners directly, as well as partnering with specialists across different fields - to deliver the best value for their clients; irrespective of channel. Their values and approach align well with Ralph - independent, collaborative and - and they frequently partner with creative agencies to efficiently bring 360 campaigns to market.

They currently work across Kids and Family focused brands such as: Nintendo, H&M Kids (and across their wider business) and Froneri Ices (Cadbury, Rowntree and Nestle) and utilise best in class planning, insights and optimisation tools in order to buy with care and price in mind. For DE and FR, 7 Stars tap into Local Planet, a network of indie, founder-led media agencies for local market knowledge and group buying power.

Ralph will: Oversee the relationship, incorporating media into our work flow to brief, direct and incorporate paid data into creative planning and reporting.

Making it all seamless and easy.

*Ralph have also planned and bought media for kids brands and publishers like Hodder and Harper Collins across TV, Cinema, OOH, YouTube, Social and Experiential. This has supported our creative production experience working for Nickelodeon, Sky Kids, Disney, CBBC, Cartoon Network, and PlayStation. Other media experience includes OOH, YouTube, Social, Publisher Partnerships (Rolling Stone, Vice) for Amazon and Sony.
